The story of Diamond Tropical Hardwoods grew out of a desire to help and serve others. Kevin and Christine Yardley, two magna cum laude Harvard graduates and newlyweds, both volunteered to teach English for the World Teach Organization in Costa Rica. Because there was no guarantee of them being stationed in the same area, Christine became a teacher in the program while Kevin began dedicating his prodigious energy to protecting the environment in an entrepreneurial way. Costa Rica had some of the fastest deforestation rates in the world, so there was a desperate need to offset this environmental destruction. Costa Rica's bio-diversity includes 5 percent of all known species in an area the size of West Virginia. The reforestation effort in Costa Rica has done a great deal of good.

Eighteen years ago, Diamond Tropical Hardwoods bought their first degraded cattle farm and began planting teak. In addition to farming teak, they have planted seventy other species including endangered native trees such as mahogany, purpleheart and cocobolo rosewood.

Today, their 12 plantations protect more than 1000 acres of primary and secondary jungle. The company has seen the impact of logging in the rainforest and the widespread harm that it produces. This is why Diamond Tropical Hardwoods adheres to the internationally renowned principles of the forest management as portrayed by the company's efforts to certify their organic and sustainable reforestation projects by the FSC approved Smartwood Program. They are the gold standard in environmentally-sound forestry management, and we are delighted that the many years we have invested in working with these group has resulted in this valuable new credential. Our dedication to detail and hard work show through in the quality and beauty of all our products. We know of no other company that grows its own wood supply, and we would not have it any other way.

What are the properties of teak?

Teak has a naturally high oil content which makes it both stable and resistant to rotting when exposed to extreme climatic conditions. For several centuries these unique qualities have made teak the preferred choice for furniture, yachts, and outdoor construction.

What is the weathering process?

Over a period of time in an outdoor environment untreated teak will weather to a silver grey. The length of time will vary with exposure to different climatic conditions.

How often do I need to clean my furniture?

Contrary to popular belief, teak furniture does not require any special maintenance or any additional protection apart from occasional cleaning. Teak will gradually change to a soft, silver-grey when left to age naturally outside by being exposed to light, air and rain.

We recommend that you allow your teak furniture to weather naturally and simply clean thoroughly once or twice a year with a teak cleaner.

How can I protect my furniture from the elements?

To protect teak surfaces from staining and to help maintain the silver grey patina on weathered teak, we recommend using a teak protector. There are various options such as Waterlox, Penofin, Sikkens, and Semco. Application of this product forms an invisible shield which helps to prevent stains from red wine, coffee, ketchup, olive oil, etc. from penetrating into the teak. Teak protector also repels moisture, keeps the furniture cleaner, and prevents mildew growth. If you wish to preserve the golden color of new teak we recommend using a teak sealer. Application of teak sealer will not affect the longevity or strength of the furniture in any way, just its appearance. If you decide to use teak sealer you will be entering a regular maintenance program as teak sealer needs to be regularly re-applied to provide continuous protection.

Can we use any of your chairs with any of your tables?

Our dining chairs and tables are made to an industry standard in height and this allows the correct distance between the seat and table top. You can confidently purchase any of our dining chairs with any of our tables.

Why are there gaps between the slats of table tops?

To allow proper drainage of rain so water does not pool on the table surface.

Does your furniture require assembly?

Some pieces are supplied fully assembled while others will need some assembly, in which case instructions are included with every product. For example legs come off the dining tables for easy storage or transport.

Does your furniture carry a warranty?

Yes, we guarantee that our furniture is fit for its intended, reasonable, life long use from the date of purchase. We also guarantee that our products are free from defective materials and workmanship, which does not include any small cracks in the end grain of the wood. Special conditions or exceptions to this warranty will apply when our furniture is intended for use commercially.
